FOAM HOME

Foam Home's Ergoshell is the world's first mattress that is orthopedically designed with an absolute plush feel. First launched in Germany, it has a moulded shell that holds vertical blocks of different cushioning materials in varying levels of firmness. It consists of three primary layers — the shell or the base, which can be moulded with flexible polyurethane foam, HR foam and memory foam or latex foam. It is vertically divided into seven zones to align with individual body contours. The vertical blocks can be also filled individually with the required level of cushioning and comfort. One can replace worn out blocks without having to change the whole mattress. The comfort layer on top can be made of single or multiple layers — there are many different options and combinations available. The Ergoshell mattress can also be customized to individual preferences.

GRAFF

Graff presents Camden, a collection of faucets and accessories designed to recall the imperious shapes of chess figures. The spout of the faucet is full-bodied and gives the whole element a unique importance and proportion. The Camden handle is available in two variants — the classic "cross" and the "lever" handle, both functional and practical in everyday use. It is produced in brass with a very low nickel and lead content, guaranteeing a long service life. In designing this collection, an emphasis was placed on the shower area and a combination of the signature cross and lever handles that may be used with the wall-mounted shower plates. All thermostatic units are compatible with the M-Series, the new modular Graff concealed system that combines diverters and cut-off valves, to meet all application needs.
